PREFACE

The value of maps and plans for a wide range of Scottish studies has become increasingly apparent in recent years, but practically nothing has been published by way of guides to this material, apart from the Royal Scottish Geographical Society's Early Maps of Scotland. The present volume is the first of a series designed to provide researchers with a descriptive list of plans preserved in the Scottish Record Office.

This volume has been reproduced by H.M. Stationery Office by photo-lithography from copy typed in the Scottish Record Office. Acknowledgement is made to H.M. Stationery Office for advice on presentation and lay-out and to the Publications and Editorial Section of the Scottish Record Office for assistance in preparing the material, particularly the index of persons and subjects, which it is hoped will make the volume more useful for both general and specialist readers. Miss Ann Young of the Map Room, National Library of Scotland, kindly provided from her own research the revised date for Gordon of Rothiemay's plan of Aberdeen.

I.H. ADAMS
INTRODUCTION

The Plans

The large collection of plans preserved in the Scottish Record Office falls into two main series: Register House Plans (RHP.), which form a general series drawn from a variety of sources; and Sheriff Court Plans (SCP.), which relate mainly to railways and other nineteenth-century public utilities. The present volume is concerned only with the Register House series.

The series of Register House Plans seems to have been started about 1849 when bulky plans were withdrawn from Court of Session processes, then in course of re-arrangement, in order to be given the benefit of specialised storage. The series has been continued for this reason, and in recent years large quantities of plans have been added to it, not only from Court processes but also from such sources as records of government departments and collections of private archives, mainly family muniments, deposited in the Scottish Record Office. Today each plan receives its RHP. number on accession to the series and is also fully documented in its natural collection. Unfortunately in the early days of the series the precise provenance of the plans was not always noted and in many cases cannot now be readily determined. The editor has, however, been successful in tracing a number of plans back to their original processes, and undoubtedly more will be achieved as the work of indexing the Court records proceeds.

Most of the plans in the Register House series were executed in the century from about 1750 to 1850. Many are manuscript; others are engraved or lithographed. The series also includes some photocopies of originals preserved elsewhere, mainly in private custody. Most of the plans are of a topographical nature, but there is a liberal sprinkling of architectural, industrial and railway plans. There are also a few maps and plans relating to other parts of the United Kingdom and overseas.

The List of Plans

Certain editorial decisions had to be made in publishing a descriptive list of the Register House series, which extends at present to some 7,000 plans and is constantly growing. It was decided that the list should be issued in a number of volumes, each describing a section of the series and designed to stand independently in point of arrangement of entries. The present volume covers RHP.1 to RHP.1200, representing accessions between 1849 and 1961.

A topographical framework has been adopted for the volumes of the list. Non-topographical plans which cannot be fitted into this framework have been omitted at this stage, but it is hoped that they may be published later. The non-Scottish maps and plans have also been omitted and maps already published by the Royal Scottish Geographical Society have only been included if the examples in the Register House series bear significant additional information. The present volume covers, to varying degrees, the whole of Scotland, but it should be remembered that the intensity of material for any given area in this and succeeding volumes is entirely fortuitous. The accessions in any section of the Register House Plans may display regional variations which are not typical of the series as a whole.

The basic topographical arrangement is by counties in alphabetical order. Within each county the entries are arranged by parishes in alphabetical order and chronologically within the parish. Cross-references have been inserted where entries relate to more than one county or parish. The modern parish, as shown on the Ordnance Survey 7th Series One-Inch maps, has been taken in every case. If no date can be attributed to a plan it has been placed at the end of the entries for the parish concerned and indicated [N.D.]. Dates supplied from secondary evidence have been placed within square brackets, circa being used to indicate editorial uncertainty of + ten years.

Each entry contains two elements: formal particulars of the plan; and remarks designed to bring out its individual characteristics. The formal element includes the title and surveyor, the grid reference, the scale and size, and the plan's number in the Register House series with a reference to its original collection where this is known. The last is most important, for the value of a plan is frequently enhanced by associated papers remaining in the collection; in some cases indeed the plan cannot be fully understood without reference to such papers.

The title is given as in the original, except for the omission of county and parish names. Original spellings of surnames and place-names have been retained, but modern usage has been adopted with regard to capitals and punctuation. A title has not been supplied where lacking, as the opening phrase of the remarks serves this purpose. The title is followed by the surveyor's name and, where applicable, by that of the engraver, lithographer or publisher. Where an unsigned plan can be attributed to a particular surveyor on grounds of distinctive style his name has been given within square brackets.

The grid reference, supplied for easy location of the plan, is based on the four figure system showing a unique reference one kilometre square. The system is explained at the foot of each Ordnance Survey One-Inch (1:63,360) sheet, to which the reader is referred. The grid reference given in this list refers to a significant point in the centre of the plan, thus accommodating those plans which are not orientated north or have some other asymmetrical features.

The scale is given first as a representative fraction, which has been reduced to a suitable round figure, and secondly in its original form, mainly in Scots or Imperial chains (i.e. 74.4 and 66 feet respectively), although the multiple scale, which gives four to seven different scales, was used occasionally, notably by Thomas Winter. The following table provides a ready guide for converting from chains to representative fractions:

Undue reliance should not be placed on the accuracy of scale of many of the plans because the surveyors' techniques, as they themselves would have been first to admit, were rudimentary. Discrepancies of scale become all too obvious when a comparison is made with an Ordnance Survey Six-Inch map. Yet this does not detract from the information contained in the plans.

The size of the plan is given in centimetres, a measure chosen because of current movement towards decimalisation and because it is possible to dispense with fractions when sizes are given to the nearest centimetre to the significant border of the plan.

One of the problems of cataloguing plans is to reduce the description to a simple formula which still retains some sympathy for the individual characteristics of documents ranging from cartographic masterpieces to the grubby scrawl of a farmer sketching his fields. It is hoped that the remarks which follow the formal particulars will overcome this difficulty by explaining the essential purpose of the plan and also noting any significant topographical or cartographic features.

The opening phrase of the remarks - estate plan, farm plan, commony plan, mining plan, and so on - makes the main purpose of the plan clear. Two cataloguing conventions have been used to achieve a proper emphasis with regard to detail appearing on the plan: "shown" or "showing" indicates functional details; further details, which although important are incidental to the main purpose, are "noted". Details are recorded as shown on the plan and no attempt has been made to collate the plan with other sources for accuracy or cartographic skill. As many place-names as possible have been included, primarily to help the reader to select plans of any particular area with the aid of an Ordnance Survey map. For this reason place-names are normally given in modern spelling, except where this has not been traced on the One-Inch sheet. The original spelling has been given within round brackets when this varies greatly from the modern rendering.

Details relating to cartographic technique have been placed at the end of the remarks because they normally have no real significance other than to illustrate the surveyor's style. Titles on Scottish plans are rarely ornamented other than by means of simple scroll-work or conventional woodland scenes. Vignettes are rare and the few known examples are very valuable in illustrating material culture. The cartouche occurs only on a few plans in the 1780s. Scales are usually unadorned, but a few examples from the early eighteenth century are found surmounted with a pair of surveyor's dividers.

Colouring is mentioned in the opening statement of the remarks where it relates to the primary function of the plan, for example to delineate an area of disputed ground. Frequently, however, colouring has been used purely for aesthetic reasons, for example the colouring of rivers blue, and in such cases it is noted with the cartographic details. Relief is, to a large extent, shown by grey brush-wash applied either solidly or in large hachures. It is so generalised that it must be

Development of large-scale cartography in Scotland

The map catalogue of the Essex County Record Office contains thirty-five estate plans dated earlier than 1600. This number cannot be matched in the Scottish Record Office for the whole of Scotland down to 1707. A certain amount may have been lost, but all the evidence shows that, despite some achievements in the field of smaller-scale maps, Scotland has no cartographic tradition of producing large-scale plans before the eighteenth century. And even then the early surveyors were imported from England; in 1718, for example, the Duke of Buccleuch employed an Englishman called Laud to make a comprehensive survey of his lands in Liddesdale. Again in 1726 Thomas Winter, an English surveyor, was brought to Scotland by Sir Archibald Grant of Monymusk to help in the consolidation of the runrig lands on his estate.

This absence of large-scale plans is, to a large extent, accounted for by the rudimentary nature of the Scottish economy up to and immediately after the Union. The primitive agricultural system provided no stimulus for making of plans, and the seventeenth-century Acts of the Scottish Parliament for the straightening of marches and enclosing of grounds (1669) and the division of commonty and runrig (1695) had rather a delayed-action effect in this direction. The initial stirrings can be seen in the 1720s when surveyors like Charles Mercer, a Dumfries schoolmaster and mathematician, began to turn their hands increasingly to surveying commonties prior to their division and enclosure.

The movement for the division of commonties appeared first in the lowland counties and Dumfriesshire and spread northwards throughout Scotland over the next 150 years. The procedure was by way of an action in the Court of Session, which appointed a commissioner to supervise the division. In turn he appointed a surveyor to make a plan showing the boundary of the commonty, as well as the different qualities of ground pointed out by the valuators. Commony plans, of which a large number have survived, provide a striking record of a cultural landscape at the moment of change. Moreover, these plans are supplemented by extremely detailed documentary evidence in the Court processes. Plans showing lands cultivated in runrig are less common but this former agricultural landscape is vividly illustrated on several plans; one of the finest, by John Ainslie, is used for the cover of this volume. Another great surveyor of the pre-enclosure landscape was Thomas Winter, a member of a large family of surveyors. His plans, mostly surveyed in the 1750s, recorded runrig lands from areas as far apart as Midlothian and Inverness. The care with which each rig is delineated, noting acreage and tenant's name, reflects Winter's capacity for detailed observation.

Roy's military survey, made between 1747 and 1755, appears to have had comparatively little influence on the production of large-scale plans in Scotland. Although his surveyors were Scots, with the exception of David Dundas, who produced a plan of Arniston House in March 1752, they do not seem to have left any large-scale plans in Scotland. It was not until Arrowsmith published his Map of Scotland in 1807, based largely on Roy's survey half a century earlier, that this material was generally available.

For some estates more or less complete collections of plans have survived, which illustrate the changes of landscape in the latter half of the eighteenth century. Runrig survived, although in a considerably debased form, up to mid-century, but thereafter it rapidly disappeared in the face of the Agricultural Revolution. The tempo of change was felt by even casual observers of the scene. The Rev. Andrew Murray, minister of Auchterderran parish, Fife, wrote in 1791: "Agriculture has advanced greatly within these few years; and the face of the country begins to change rapidly." Stone wall, thorn hedge, rectangular field, plantation and isolated farmstead all created a new landscape which has come down to us at the present day as the familiar rural scene. The bulk of the plans record the new rather than the old; it was the exception for a conscious effort to be made to survey the lands about to be consolidated and enclosed.

This rather pragmatic evolution of Scottish large-scale plans produced a school of cartographers who had little time for the traditional cartographic embellishments, although not unmindful of artistic presentation. The plans themselves are inherently simple, as their design and use was nearly always functional. This type of plan is seen from the hands of William Anderson, John Home, George Brown, the Winter family, Thomas Milne and, greatest of them all, John Ainslie.

Born in Jedburgh on 22nd April 1745, Ainslie produced a plan of his birthplace in 1770. Thereafter this prolific surveyor and engraver produced a great variety of maps and plans. Ainslie was as much at home with a hydrological chart as with a detailed estate plan, and his success in achieving a balance between artistic presentation and scientific precision could only have stemmed from dedication to cartography. Even in the midst of all his work on the national scale, which included many county maps, town plans, charts, canal projects, port plans and travelling maps, Ainslie found time to do magnificent books of estate plans. The present volume contains a fine example in the Eglinton Plan Book of 1791, each page of which includes a miniature perspective view of the farm concerned.

The expansion of plan production at the end of the eighteenth century, due to the Agrarian Revolution, increased in momentum in the nineteenth century, now partly under the stimulus of the developing Industrial Revolution. Technology was being applied to agriculture, industry and mining; the country town was being transformed into the industrial city with an appetite for rural fringe land; distance was being broken down by improved communications. All these developments are reflected in the plans of the time.

In the countryside better equipment and increasing confidence allowed projects, once dreams, to be pursued. Great areas of marsh, such as Flanders, Blairdrummond and Boquhapple mosses in the carselands of the Upper Forth valley, were drained at the beginning of the nineteenth century. These operations are recorded in detail on plans and documents which give an insight into the confident optimism alive at this time. Reclamation of a similar nature but on a smaller scale had been accomplished earlier with the draining of Loch Spynie in Drainie parish, Moray.

2 RHP.3. See pages 29, 31-5 and 141.
Application of the steam engine to mining allowed a more flexible exploitation of the carboniferous lowlands. Quarrying of outcrop and shallow seam virtually gave way to deep-mining, which had up to this time been bedevilled by drainage problems. The increased production of coal overloaded the rudimentary transport system and stimulated the construction of horse-drawn wagonways, as at Cockenzie, Musselburgh, Bo'ness, Kirkintilloch, Gorbals and Fordell. The canal had a brief era in Scotland in the late eighteenth and early nineteenth century but was soon to be overshadowed by the railways.

It was the building of the railways that marked the significant point in the history of the surveying profession. Surveyors were not only surveying but also effectively planning complex engineering projects, and this foreshadowed an essential change in the profession. The end of the private surveyor came with the establishment of the first Ordnance Survey teams in Scotland after 1840, when six counties - Midlothian, Fife, East Lothian, Kinross, Kirkcudbright and Wigtown - and the Island of Lewis were surveyed at the Six-Inch scale before disagreement over scales brought the survey to a halt in 1852. After that date it was agreed that cultivated areas be surveyed at 25-Inch scale and the rest at Six-Inch. Little scope was left to the highly individualistic cartographic craftsman. The public found the new maps and plans more easily obtainable, more accurate and, most important of all, less expensive. The topographical surveyor, now a member of a redundant profession, was forced to make the rapid transition to civil engineer or architect. It is hoped that these professions gained the qualities of design and artistic presentation that the last great surveyors - James Forbes Beattie, William Blackadder, Thomas Carfrae and others - displayed in their plans.

The bulk of the manuscript plans in this catalogue were produced in the century 1750 to 1850, which marks the rise of Scotland from an underdeveloped country to a highly industrialised society. The cartographic revolution, no less than the social revolution, reflected the increasing prosperity of the Scottish nation. If economic wellbeing does not depend on maps, at least the production of maps depends on the economic health of a nation.

Auchindoir and Kearn

[c.1771] That part of the lands of Forbes comprehending the parish of Kearn. [By John Home.]
NJ4823 [1:3600] 1 in. = 4 Sc.chs. 143 x 222 cm.
Detailed runrig plan of the lands east of the Water of Bogie. Farm boundaries coloured including Castlehill, Bogieside, Mains of Castle Forbes, Castle Croft, Barslit, Stone Dyke and Cairn Baird, Mill of Barslit, Cushnie, Windseye, Westhills and Marchmar with tenants named. Field boundaries shown with field-names and description of soil and numbered to correspond with table of contents giving acreages of infield, outfield, meadow grass, wood and grass, pasture, moor and moss. Castle Forbes, parks, gardens, farm buildings, Barslit mill and lead, roads and adjacent owners noted. Relief by grey brush hachures. Title within ornamental scroll-work. Illustrated key. Coats of arms of Lord Forbes and Forbes of Newe. View of Castle Forbes (15 x 13 cm.) with hunting scene.
RHP.260/1 (in three sections)

Clatt

[c.1771] That part of the lands of Forbes lying in the parish of Clatt. [By John Home.]
NJ5226 [1:3600] 1 in. = 4 Sc.chs. 72 x 104 cm.
Detailed runrig plan with farm boundaries coloured. Farm buildings shown at East and Wester Tayloch (Tailliach), Blairindinny, Bogend, Towie, Stony Field, Bankhead, Percylie and Braeside. Tenants named with table of contents giving

Cluny

1834 See Tough parish.

Crathie and Braemar

1826 Part of Mar Forest with the woods divided into lots. Lithographed by Forrester and Company, Edinburgh.
N00889 [c.1:13,000] No scale 73 x 52 cm.
Plan of lands north of River Dee at Inverey. Mar Lodge, Inverey village, sawmill, and ruins of dam and sawmill noted. Thirty-seven lots of woodland shown.
RHP.811 J.K. and W.P. Lindsay's papers

Crimond

1774 Mains and policie about the House of Logie, the property of the Hon. Vice Admiral Duff. [By John Home.]
NK0356 [1:1800] 1 in. = 2 Sc.chs. 70 x 50 cm.
Estate plan showing house, parks and gardens. Field boundaries shown with field-names and acreages of arable, pasture and plantations given in table of contents. Dam, mill, kiln, peat yard and pigeon house noted. Names of adjacent lands. Pictorial title which includes a partial view of naval vessel.
South view of House.

Culsalmond

[c.1780] Mains and policie of Newton with the farms of Ladyingham, the seat of Captain Alexander Davidson, Esq. [By John Home.]
NJ6629 [1:3600] 1 in. = 4 Sc.chs. 85 x 130 cm.
Detailed estate plan showing house, parks, gardens and farms including Little and South Ledikin, Brankanentum, Glenniston, Mellenside and Gateside. Farm and field boundaries with field-names and acreages given. Some runrig, plantings and enclosures shown. Newton mill, limekiln, pigeon-loft, wells, road and ford noted.
RHP.985

Drumoak

1807 Hill of Coldstream.
N07899 [1:2200] 1 in. = 2½ Sc.chs. 49 x 57 cm.
Farm plan coloured to show land use - pasture and arable. Infield, enclosures, cornland, folds and faughs noted. Names of adjacent farms include Tersets, Coldstream, Broomfield and Leys. Roads and march stones shown.
RHP.802 J.K. and W.P. Lindsay's papers
Dyce

[1748] The lands of Balgossy.
NJ8512 [c.1:6300] No scale 40 x 33 cm.
Lands of Balgosie showing marches and disputed area. Some land use indicated - arable, moss, parks and enclosure. Farm buildings at Balgosie, Sleepy Hillock and Standingstones.
Deer dykes, stone circle, old and new roads and Burn of Bogenjoss (Bogingoss) noted. Relief by green wash.
Detailed explanation attached to plan. RHP.263

Echt
