EXPLANATORY NOTE

(This note is not part of the Regulations but is intended to indicate their general purport.)

These Regulations amend the Petroleum (Production) Regulations, 1935, which set out the requirements for applications for, and the model clauses to be incorporated in, prospecting and mining licences issued under the Petroleum (Production) Act, 1934, to search, bore for and get petroleum.

The Regulations introduce a new type of licence, a methane drainage licence, and set out the requirements for applications for, and the model clauses to be incorporated in, such licences. The new licence authorises the getting of natural gas in the course of operations for making and keeping safe mines, is to be granted for areas of not less than four, and not more than ten thousand, square miles and is for a term of twenty-five years with provision for a renewal for a further twenty-five years. No royalties are to be levied but annual payments are to be made to be agreed between the Minister, with the consent of the Treasury, and the Licensee.
